Battered and broken, Nancy* decided to move her and her children from New York to Clay County after she was assaulted by her husband.

Since Nancy didn't have many family members in Florida, she found refuge in the Domestic Violence shelter, where she nursed her broken arm and broken spirits. During her stay, she received a referral for services with ELC for her children.

After Nancy enrolled her children, this new break motivated her to find a job to make enough money to rent a home.

Due to the assistance she received from the Domestic Violence Shelter and ELC, she no longer has to deal with the vicious circle of abuse and unemployment and is thrilled to provide a better life for her children as well as a home the fenced-in backyard she had always wanted since she was a child.
